

THE ORANGE COUNTY REGISTER

PRICE: $2 • SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 2016 • OCREGISTER.COM

PETE SOUZA, THE WHITE HOUSE

President Barack Obama greets Eagle Scout Dan Ta of Cypress and other representatives from the Boy Scouts of America to receive their Report to the Nation in the Oval Office on Tuesday.

Dad's determination is son's motivation in visit with Obama

Dan Ta, a 16-year-old Eagle Scout, got to hang out with the president. His father tracked every move.

JOSEPH PIMENTEL
STAFF WRITER

At 8:22 a.m. Eastern time Tuesday, Dan Ta punched a message into his phone.

Three time zones away, at 5:22 a.m., his mother, Lan Vo, picked it up:

"White House."

She turned to her husband, Lu Ta, but he already was awake. Neither parent had been able to sleep for the last few days.

Their son, a 16-year-old Eagle Scout, was in Washington, D.C., to do something that, in their eyes, was almost a dream – to meet face-to-face with President Barack Obama.

She texted back: "Time for you (to) shake hands."

For a brief time, at the White House, Dan Ta and nine other Scouts waited in a lobby outside the Oval Office. The mood was tense. He looked at paintings and other art.

Finally, Obama himself opened the SCOUT: Father struggled to escape communist rule in Vietnam door and waved them in.

FROM PAGE 1

He might as well have been inviting in Lu Ta, too.

THE MESSENGER

Dan Ta is a sophomore at Oxford Academy in Cypress. He's a little goofy, quick to laugh, but a spectacular student - a 4.25 GPA.

He's good at sports, too; he runs track and plays soccer for Oxford. But he devotes most of his free time to the U.S. Naval Sea Cadet Corps and the Boy Scouts.

As a federally chartered organization since 1916, the Boy Scouts of America presents an annual report to Congress that highlights the group's achievements during the previous year. National and local affiliations nominate delegates to represent the Scout's 2.3 million members. Dan Ta was meeting Obama as part of that effort, one of the 10 delegates chosen to deliver the Scouts' Report to the Nation.

Dan Ta got the job for a lot of reasons. He's zero trouble. He mentors younger Sea Cadets. In the sixth grade he won eight medals in the Orange County Academic Pentathlon. He has a sailing license.

But more than all of that, Dan Ta is best known for one other thing - he's the founder of the Penny Wise Club at Oxford Academy.

The idea behind the club, to teach high school age students about money management and the power of saving while young, came to him a couple years ago, after his father told the family that it was possible he'd lose his job as a software engineer.

It speaks to Dan Ta's standards, and his hustle to get his Eagle Scout status, that he asked State Controller John Chiang to speak to his club.

And Chiang, who soon became the state treasurer, did.

"I get hundreds of projects on my desk, and this one just stuck out," said Jeffrey Herrmann, president and Scout executive of the Orange County Boy Scouts.

"Not many kids can do that."

THE MESSAGE

As Dan Ta waited in the lobby outside the Oval Office, Lu Ta got out of his bed in Cypress and fired up his computer.

The screen showed blue zig-zagging lines and a cluster of orange dots - Dan's movements that morning.

As he clicked and tracked and imagined where his son

LEONARD ORTIZ, STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Oxford Academy student and Eagle Scout Dan Ta is joined by his family: from left, mother Lan Vo, sister Ivy, Dan and father Lu.

was, Lu Ta had a moment of wonder:

"He's really there."

When Lu Ta was Dan's age, he was in a jungle prison cell in Vietnam. Lu Ta had been trying to escape communist rule, but he kept getting caught. And when he got caught, he was put in jail.

When he got out, he'd try again. Lu Ta's goal, even 35 years ago, was to get to a place where there would be opportunities for the kids he someday would have.

Lu Ta said later that his son's face-to-face meeting with Obama just validated what he has thought all along, even in a jungle cell in Vietnam.

"This is the land of opportunity."

Lu Ta's escape was a family affair.

His mother, he said, spent all of her savings to help him get out of Vietnam. In 1981, when he arrived in the United States, to stay with cousins in Rochester, N.Y., he was 19, spoke no English, and hadn't been to school past the sixth grade.

He forced himself to learn to read and write English. He spent two years in high school and then went to the Rochester Institute of Technology, where he says he graduated in the top 1 percent of his class.

During that period, Lu Ta kept dairies, which he still has in his Cypress home. The pages are yellow, a little brown at the edges; withered. But the black ink, mostly written in Vietnamese, is full of life.

Page one tracks the day of his escape, in January 1981. Other pages show long, well-organized lists of common English words and Vietnamese pronunciations.

Man [maen], back [baek], book [buk]...

"The reason why I wrote this was I wanted to give them to my kids."

Lu Ta's goal was to motivate his kids. It worked.

When he sees the dairies, Dan Ta says he gets the message.

"I feel happiness, sadness ... anger."

THE MEETING

The Scouts were tense. Obama wasn't.

During their 10 minutes in the Oval Office, Obama told them he'd been a Cub Scout. He also said that, as Scouts, Dan Ta and his compatriots were America's future leaders.

"He made everyone feel at ease," Dan Ta said.

"I gave him a fist bump as we were leaving."

They'd go on to shake hands with U.S. Surgeon General Vivek Murthy, as well as Congresswoman Nancy Pelosi, and House Speaker Paul Ryan. But the highlight of the six-day trip was the 10 minutes spent in the world's most famous office.

Obama, Dan Ta noted, has a firm handshake.

"America has given so much to my family," Dan Ta said. "Now I want to give back and serve my country."

CONTACT THE WRITER:

714-796-2443 or

jimentel@ocregister.com

Ian C.

Ian C. never looked to become a hero. But when the opportunity required it, in true Boy Scout fashion, he was prepared.

The son of a firefighter, a longtime member of the Huntington Beach Junior Lifeguards at the time and on his way to becoming an Eagle Scout, Ian had the training and the DNA needed to help save two terrified Boy Scouts who found themselves pinned behind a pounding 200-foot waterfall.

"I feel it should be the norm," he said. "Anyone who has the tools and training to help someone should do that."

The Huntington Beach resident was awarded the prestigious Honor Medal with Crossed Palms, the Boy Scouts National Lifesaving Award at his Eagle Scout Court of Honor. The medal is one of fewer than 300 the Boy Scouts have awarded nationally since 1924, and is given for "unusual heroism and extraordinary skill or resourcefulness in saving or attempting to save a life at extreme risk to self."

"Receiving this medal is a tremendous honor. It's an incredible feeling to know that I am being honored as highly as this. But I didn't do this for an award. I did this because I heard that there were two people that needed help and I knew that I could help them. I think that anyone who has the skill set to do anything for somebody else should do that," said Ian.

To those who know Ian, it is fitting. His Scout leaders praised his ability to take direction and his willingness to help others. "To watch him grow and achieve this rank is a major achievement. But then to hear he earned his Honor Medal with Cross Palms is just amazing. There are a lot of great young men, but to find one who is willing to risk their own life is very rare," said former assistant Scout leader Steve.

Huntington Beach City Councilman Erik Peterson agrees. He stated, "And this is one of those selfless acts that Scouting is based on. It's more than just you, it's everyone around you. It's an honor to come out and give this award to someone like Ian. This young man went the extra mile for that award."

Conner W.

17-year-old Conner had just completed his mile run and was taking a break when he heard the sound of someone falling to the ground. A student had collapsed and was having a seizure. Conner and his teacher went to the aid of the student in need. The student was unable to speak following his seizure. When he did finally speak, he said he felt nauseous so Conner, with the help of his teacher and another student, turned the student onto his side. Conner checked the boy's eyes to see if they were dilated and they were. He waited with his teacher and the student until the paramedics arrived. Conner's teacher said that he helped her stay calm through this very scary situation. Conner attributes his quick actions to the skills he learned in his first aid merit badge course as well as other Boy Scout training.

For his exceptional act of character, Conner was awarded the National Certificate of Merit by the National Court of Honor.

Andrew C.

In July of 2014, 11-year-old Andrew and his family went to their community pool to go swimming. His little brother Eliot was so excited to go swimming that before their mother was even through the gate, he jumped into the deep end without any flotation devices. He immediately began to panic and sink. Andrew jumped right in, dove under the water, brought his brother to the surface and securely placed his arm around Eliot's chest. He then swam slowly on his back to the ladder and assisted his brother out. Andrew sat with his brother until he was over his shock and calm enough to thank him for saving his life. Thanks to Andrew's quick thinking and the use of the skills he learned at summer camp while earning his swimming merit badge, he was able to save his little brother from drowning. For his honorable action of saving a life, Andrew was awarded the Honor Medal by the National Court of Honor.

Focus | ORANGE SLICES

From the back of a truck, Jake Larsen, a Boy Scout from Troop 188, points out the house that he and his dad, driver Doug Larsen, were looking for to deliver a flag.

Larry Ricks, Jenn Larsen, Billy Howard, Doug Larsen, Tom Ahlstrom and Jake Larsen, from left, gather behind the Larsen family van filled with flags to discuss the flag distribution routes.

Derek Larsen, left and his brother, Jake, on Memorial Day collect American flags before sunset in accordance with United States flag code. According to the code, it is custom to display the flag only from sunrise to sunset on buildings and on stationary staffs in the open. The flag may be displayed 24 hours if properly illuminated.

OLD GLORY, NEW IDEA

Story and photos
by MICHAEL GOULDING
STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Most would agree that one of the pleasures of a holiday is the opportunity to sleep in, especially if you're a teenager. But Boy Scouts from Troop 188 of Los Alamitos passed up that luxury last week for the sake of both patriotism and entrepreneurship.

As their friends snoozed on Memorial Day, the Scouts were up before the sun to start the inaugural task of Flags All Year – a paid service that displays Old Glory on front lawns six times a year.

“I thought this program would be for the older military guy who isn't able to put up his own flag,” said Eagle Scout and dad Billy Howard, who came up with the idea. “But people of all ages have shown interest.”

For $55 annually, the troop will place a 3-by-5-foot American flag outside subscribers' houses on Presidents Day, Memorial Day, Flag Day, Independence Day, Labor Day and Veterans Day.

Funds raised through the program will help troop members attend camp in the summer.

For their debut outing on the recent Me-

Jake Larsen, left, and his dad, Doug, prepare the lawn of a Seal Beach home for an American flag. The flag will be displayed six times a year as part of Troop 188's fundraiser, Flag All Year.

HAVE A SUGGESTION?

Orange Slices is an occasional series of stories about people in our community. If you have an idea, please send it to Director of Photography Michele Cardon at mcardon@ocregister.com.

morial Day, Scouts inserted plastic pipes in the yards to be used as permanent pole holders. They also stenciled small Boy Scout emblems on curbs to direct them to the holes in the future.

The banners will be planted by 8 a.m. and picked up before the sun goes down, per flag code.

On Memorial Day morning, three cars loaded with nine volunteers headed out from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Los Alamitos, where they had picked up 125 banners to unfurl at homes and businesses.

Troop families – starting with the Larsens – will take turns overseeing the flag mission.

Doug Larsen and his two sons had to leave a barbecue that afternoon to retrieve flags.

Scout-O-Rama 2017

Over 10,000 enjoy Scouting on display!

SCOUTING AND THE SEA

PHOTOS: COURTESY OF BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA ORANGE COUNCIL

Guests at the Newport Sea Base open house on Saturday prepare to kayak on the waters off Newport Bay.

CELEBRATING SEA BASE

The facility, operated by the Boy Scouts, commemorates its decades of maritime educational programs

By Louis Casiano
lcasiano@scng.com
@LouisCasiano on Twitter

The Newport Sea Base celebrated its 80th anniversary Saturday with an open house and entertainment filled with sea life touch tanks and pontoon boat rides.

The event was meant to highlight the maritime educational programs the sea base has provided since opening in 1937.

The Orange County Council of the Boy Scouts of America, which operates the property, recognized Bob Jessen, leader of Sea Scout Ship 306 — the first unit in the nation to allow girls into the fold, in 1969.

Jessen was honored by the county for his leadership and “trailblazing for the thousands of young women who have since followed,” a Boy Scouts statement said.

In 2016, more than 6,000 children participated in programs on the property that include oceanography, environmental science, marine biology and STEM (science, technology, engineering and math) activities.

Children gather at the Newport Sea Base open house to celebrate its 80 years.

MEMORIAL DAY

PHOTOS: KEVIN SULLIVAN — STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Cub Scout Andrew Weisenberger, 8, of Garden Grove places a flag on the gravesite of a veteran at Pacific View Memorial Park in Corona del Mar on Saturday. Thirty-seven Scouts from Pack 316 and Troop 1134 in Orange County, helped by parents and siblings, participated.

Boy Scouts plant flags for vets at Pacific View

By Kevin Sullivan
ksullivan@scng.com

Local Boy Scouts paid their respects to veterans as they canvassed Pacific View Memorial Park in Corona del Mar on Saturday, painting the hallowed grounds with the red, white and blue of hundreds of American flags during a service project in preparation for the Memorial Day weekend.

"I'm a veteran myself, so I really appreciate it," said Jim Hills, a preplanning adviser for Pacific View for 21 years. "These kids learn flag etiquette, they learn cemetery etiquette. They want to be here. I think it's awesome."

Thirty-seven Scouts from Pack 316 and Troop 1134 in Orange County, helped by both parents and siblings, spent the morning searching the nearly 45,000 gravesites at the hillside cemetery scanning headstones while looking for Marines, soldiers and seamen to honor.

"I just have a proud feeling and a sad feeling at the same time," said Isaac Stone, 10, a Webelo from Huntington Beach, "because I'm happy that I'm doing this to honor others and I'm sad that they had to sacrifice their lives for us."

"I just have a proud feeling and a sad feeling at the same time because I'm happy that I'm doing this to honor others and I'm sad that they had to sacrifice their lives for us."

— Isaac Stone, 10, of Huntington Beach

Boy Scouts from Pack 316 and Troop 1134 joined together for service projects, planting flags on the gravesites of those who have died while serving in the armed forces.